

Update 1: Intercontinental Exchange (Interactive Data) - Reopens New York Stock Exchange

- Intercontinental Exchange's subsidiary New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) has reopened its trading floor after a two-month closure due to the COVID-19 pandemic
- The NYSE is one of the few bourses to still feature floor trade - most have shifted to fully-electronic trading
- New York City has been hit hard by the outbreak with some 200,000 cases and more than 20,000 deaths
- Financial markets have continued to trade throughout the pandemic, but the exchange's trading floor was closed from March 23, 2020, and activity temporarily moved to fully-electronic trading to protect workers
- New York Governor Andrew Cuomo was on hand to ring the bell that re-started in-person trade, a sign of the symbolic weight attached to the reopening
