

Update 46: Mexico City - More Restrictions Eased as Hospital Occupancy Drops

- COVID-19 restrictions in Mexico City were eased slightly, although the capital remains orange light a high risk on the federal government stoplight map
- For the first time in more than two months, restaurants may now seat diners in indoor spaces, albeit only at 20% of normal capacity
- However, restaurants are only permitted to open up indoor dining spaces if they have run out of room in open-air areas, where a 40% capacity limit applies
- Mexico City begins its second week at the high-risk level after remaining at red light maximum risk for eight weeks between mid-December and mid-February
- Outdoor theatrical productions were permitted to resume last week and gyms, public swimming pools, and places of worship were allowed to reopen
- Restaurants were permitted to reopen to in-house diners at the tail end of the eight-week red light period but only in outdoor areas
- As of Sunday night, 56% of beds set aside for COVID-19 patients in Mexico City hospitals were occupied
- The occupancy rate peaked at about 90% last month, although many hospitals in the capital reached full capacity
- As of now, Mexico has reported 2,043,632 confirmed COVID-19 cases with 180,536 deaths, 8.83% of total reported cases and 1,602,024 recoveries, 78.3% of total reported cases
- When compared to the overall population of the country, confirmed COVID-19 cases and fatality rate stands at 0.026% and 0.002%, respectively
- Supply Wisdom is continuously monitoring the situation and will alert you to any relevant developments
- Please consult the National Institute of Public Health (<https://www.insp.mx/>) for the latest information on COVID-19 in Mexico
